Bullying is when someone tries to hurt or embarrass someone else again and again. At school, bullies are one of the largest problems for teachers. Bullying can also go on for adults, making work miserable for some people.

Being bullied causes a lot of stress at any age. Students can be hurt both in their body and in their mind. A student's body might heal, but it can take much longer for the mind to heal.

Bullying is a difficult problem, but there are solutions. First, people must learn about bullying at a very young age and why it is so bad. This can be at school or at home with family. It can also be helpful to just walk away from a bully. Many bullies want to see their victim react. If the victim does not react, bullies often lose interest. If a bully does not stop, it's best to find someone for help right away. Friends, family, teachers, and even the police are all there to help students find solutions to their problems.
