Having fears is our nature. However, if your fear of something becomes too strong and causes trouble in your life, you might have a phobia. Here are some examples. People with cynophobia (fear of dogs) get scared when they see a dog and when they think of dogs. They might stay in the house all day just to avoid seeing dogs. Phobias like claustrophobia (fear of small spaces) and acrophobia (fear of heights) are also very common.

When looking for the cause of phobias, you don't always get an answer. Sometimes the cause might be terrible past experiences. Sometimes you learn to fear something because your parents fear it, too. You might hear people telling you to be brave from time to time, but it is okay not to be. Facing fear is never easy, and for people with phobias, it is even more difficult.

"We are all starving. I work, and I get money. I have money, and I buy food for my family," Katrina Kaif told the police when they stopped her on her way to work. Katrina, an eight-year-old girl, lives in a small town in India. But when COVID-19 hit, her parents lost their jobs, and the school closed. Katrina can't go to school, so they sent her out to find a job. She is not the only one. In her hometown, there are about 90,000 child workers. The kids work hard for long hours and only get 12 US dollars a month.

Child labor mostly happens in Africa and Asia. Some children work because their parents ask them to; and others work because they don't want to go to school. Because of COVID-19, child labor is getting more serious.

Luckily, international aid organizations like Love Children try their best to help children like Katrina. They give money to poor families from China, Malawi, India, Kenya, Uganda, and Rwanda. They also help those families fight COVID-19. There may be a lot of sad stories every day, but there is always hope.
