King's Day is a big holiday in the Netherlands now, but there was no King's Day until 2013. At first, the country celebrated Princess' Day on August 31 every year for the birthday of Princess Wilhelmina. After Wilhelmina's father died, she became the new queen, and the country changed Princess' Day to Queen's Day. The next two queens, Juliana and Beatrix, celebrated Queen's Day on April 30. On this day, the queen always travelled around the country with her whole family.

Then, after Willem Alexander became king, the country celebrated King's Day for the first time on April 27, 2014. On this day, there are many parties and markets in the park and the street. Because orange is the color of the royal family of the Netherlands, people around the country dress up in their orange costumes, wear orange wigs, and even paint their faces orange on this day.
