On a lovely night, some monkeys happily played in the trees. One small monkey, feeling thirsty, went to a well by the trees. Looking into the well, he shouted, "Oh, no! The moon has fallen into the well!" An older monkey, who heard him, came over, took a look, and cried out, "Oh, my! The moon is really in the water." Then, all the other monkeys ran over, looked into the well, and shouted. "The night will become too dark without the moon in the sky," a big monkey said. "Let's get the moon out," the oldest monkey said, and everyone agreed.

"But the moon is so big that our bucket is not big enough to hold it, and the well is so deep that no one's arm is long enough to get to the moon," a lady monkey said. When everyone was worried about the moon, the monkey king arrived. Spotting a tree by the well, with branches just above, he proudly said, "I, your wisest king, have an idea. You just follow what I do." Then, the monkey king hung upside down with his feet on one of the branches and held another monkey's feet with his hands. Soon, the other monkeys followed what their king did. Just before they got to the water, the branch broke, and the monkeys all fell into the well.
